SUBJECT: General Fox's paper of 25 February, subject: "U.S. Disarmament Policy"

DATE: February 28, 1957

I cannot comment at this time on the possibility of achieving agreement for the approach to the inspection outlined by General Fox; but I can say that from the technical intelligence standpoint there is no question that his proposals would provide the U.S. a great deal more useful information than the progressive geographic approach.

SUBJECT: Bohlen's Views on Disarmament

In a meeting at CIA this morning, Mr. Bohlen was asked about his views on the Russian feeling about disarmament. He replied that he felt that the Russians wanted very badly to get back to negotiating with the U.S. about disarmament, ~~but~~ they were very uncomfortable over the complete break in communications on this subject which has existed during the past year, but ~~that~~ that they were not necessarily interested in reaching any substantial agreement.
